NOTICE

June brides do not have the monopoly on June this year. Indeed, if the June bride is not one of the first of June she will not be recorded in the 1956 census as married. For the census is on June 1, and no one can be married after that date. The census taker will be looking for the bride to be married on June 1, and if she is not, she will not be recorded as married.

If this same June bride was going to have several people for weekend guests or dinner she would, in order to plan accommodation, food and recreation for the guests, know the age, sex, marital status and number expected. As with a hostess with a party, the census taker would need to know the number of guests to expect, in order to plan the party accordingly.

Organization at the basic level is necessary. Organization at the administrative bodies rely heavily on population statistics as well. Expansion of services such as roads, schools and water works are dependent on population figures. Business uses these figures in market analysis, organization of production and sales programs, location of retail outlets and so on.

The census of 1956 is special in several ways. It is the 10th Canadian-wide census; it is the first Canada-wide 5 year census (only the provinces had a five year agriculture and population census) and the questions asked have never been asked in the 1951 census.

A national 5-year census of agriculture will improve greatly the accuracy of annual estimates of crop and livestock. Over a 10 year period these estimates based on sample estimates become unreliable because of accumulative errors in sampling.

This census will secure information by small geographical areas which will be of assistance to government at all levels in the administration of agricultural policy. Sample surveys are not practical for obtaining information by small areas.

The farm family will be asked 76 questions as compared with only 1951 and the family will be asked only 5 questions as compared with 29 in 1951. The answers are used for statistical purposes only and the enumerators are under oath and penalized for releasing information to individuals. The Bureau of Statistics itself is forbidden to lay bare any personal matter.

Center of the month is farm income as compared with income in non-farm areas.

When he was persecuted by Mr. Mackenzie King to enter politics almost at the top he, even before a party man, had been with his Civil Service half dozen (as it often was), but the Liberal Party was plainly then the most representative of Canada as a whole, and Mike Pearson was always a good Canadian. It was in the hands of the Liberal Party that Canada has been marked Canada has unfortunately made an international affair of the last few years. Much of the original inspiration of NATO was here; she had great influence in the hands of the Liberal Party, and the hands of the Liberal Party of the Korean War. Canada is to the United States as the Communist Party is to Britain, and to Britain as Britain is to Europe, distant, intimate, understanding but distinct, different and could, with a weight of her own that is generally cast for moderation. These words were as well for Pearson's own relationship to his innumerable friends in Whitehall and Westminster, Washington, and New York.
